topic I chose to do my research essay on is how the modern day youth use and are influenced by the different genres of music that they are exposed to in everyday situations, no matter where they go. I've based most of my assignment on the personal observations which I have made while studying adolescences in everyday settings over the period of roughly a month. I decided that the best places to do my observations would be at the local malls and stores throughout Charlottetown where you'd typically find the Music has got the power to easily influence teens in many different ways. Rock, heavy metal, and rap are some of the most popular genres that are known to have an obvious effect on a lot of teens. As the popularity of this music continues to grow, teens are at a higher risk of becoming suicidal, sexually active, and even violent. Music is also known to be one of the most impacting tools in our society today and it is something that is unique to each person and is something that everybody has their own opinion about. Everyone has their own tastes in music and each genre has its own ways of leaving an impact on someone. A song can be energizing, relaxing, soothing, angering, and many more. Modern day youth are falling victim to societal conditioning and are completely unaware of it, and not everybody is mindful as to how something as simple as a song can be controlling your mood, and in some ways your personality. After observing friends, family, and the odd passer-byers in stores, I came to the conclusion that music sends a sort of subliminal message to the brain which has an impact on you as a person. I myself am greatly shaped by the music I listen to, and by knowing this I learned how to make myself a happier ...show more content...

From personal experience, music is one of the best, and most comforting ways to get you through tough times. When my cousin was killed in a car accident in 2011, I, playing around me to keep me from thinking about the upsetting events. But there are a lot of people who also use music even when they're experiencing happy moments in their life. Another personal experience of mine was when I was in high school and went through a long phase of depression. I would be listening to sad and depressing

Since the earliest days of human civilization music has been a key tool for communication of stories which carried emotions through them. If we think back to our youngest years of life music has surrounded us whether it was from our parents singing us lullabies or from some sort of toy that played music we can say that musical melodies have helped shape our lives one way or another. Once we start growing up

“We favor music censorship? No, that’s not true,” says Wendy Wright of an organization, Concerned Women for America, on the enemy list of virtually all other anti-censorship supporters. “Censorship means that the government restrains speech. We are in favor of those in the music industry using common sense: In essence, that they don’t promote behavior or activities that they wouldn’t want committed against their wife or children.” CWFA sees music the music in question as having potential to cultivate certain ideas in the minds of the youth. “The argument that it does not affect kids, that it does not promote similar behavior, is

Over the years, music has been a part of our lives. In some times throughout history and in today's world, music along with lyrics of songs and musical artists are blamed for deviant behavior in adolescents and teenagers. Some argue that subcultures are created because of artists and their music which leads to groups of young adults taking part in deviant behavior, while others argue the opposite; that the behavior leads the person to listen to the music. There is also concern

People are surrounded by music every day of their lives. They hear it in their homes, on the radio on their way to work; some people have even caught themselves humming the tune of their favorite song to themselves. But how many people actually listen and not just hear the music they are listening to? Teens in particular don't realize the message behind the music they are quoting the lyrics to, or the effect it has on them. In today's culture where rap music has
