R & B Music Genre Analysis

804 Words • 2 Pages

1. When I first came into this class, I did not fully understand genre and what exactly it meant. I was aware that genre exists in music, such as rap, hip hop, R&B, classical, rock, etc. Going off of my knowledge on that, I thought that genre was similar to a subcategory. I thought that genre was the smaller parts that construct a bigger idea. Other than that, I did not have a really clear definition of genre.

2. Now, I define genre differently than before this class. Genre can exist in just about every aspect of society. Genre is a category that arises from artistic, musical, media, or literature compositions that have similarities. Genre exists

My idea of genre has certainly changed by completing our three major projects. The first paper enriched my idea about genre and taught me a significant amount of information on how genre is formed, what exactly it is, and what it entail

In the first paper, I wrote about R&B music and how it can negatively reflect women and create sexual stereotypes.

Something that has really stuck with me about genre is an activity that we did at the very beginning of the semester. In class, we watched several music videos on YouTube and wrote all of the different genres that existed in the music video. This taught me different aspect of genre, and really showed me how music obtains various genres. In paper 2, I did research on eating disorders and how society can influence and encourage them. This paper taught me a lot about society and the impacts of social media. I learned a remarkable amount of information about genre in this paper, along with paper 3. I learned that genre can exist in so many aspects, and it does not just exist in music. In paper 3, I created three genre compositions about eating disorders and creating a positive body image. I used a Twitter, Prezi, and a brochure as my compositions for the genre of eating disorders. Paper 3 taught me how eating disorders can exist in society and the various harms they include. The three major projects have changed my idea and image of genre, because prior I did not know that genre could exist in so many different forms. Genres can exist in music, social

... been changing in movies and television to adjust for everything feeling “familiar”. Horror-spoof flicks and action, romance, comedy movies have been made because sticking to one genre would now bore people and would result in them walking out or changing the channel. The only question left is what will happen once people are bored with genre mixing. In other words, when the “strange” becomes “familiar” what will satisfy people’s appetite for entertainment? Maybe the emergence of the perfect genre will take over the market by stealing the best parts of all music and combining it to please everyone. The Internet Age
